

Michelle Jean-Edwards

Author's Bio

Michelle Jean-Edwards has always loved writing. She primarily wrote poetry. She gained inspiration during COVID to tell a compelling story about young adult professional African Americans being great in America. She desired to tell a story about people she knew in her professional career. Basically, she wanted to present the leading lady and man as black people. She aspired to show the humanistic element of the characters brought to life. These characters could be the readers' sister, brother, girlfriend, boyfriend, wife, husband, and not just the flamboyant, loud friend. She yearned to depict characters of color could have sex appeal and be desirable. She sought to portray the struggles and triumphant battles all all people face on a regular basis with black character's flavor.

Book Bio

Every Side book series involves African American twenty somethings whose lives are closely interconnected before something unthinkable happens one day that can't be reversed. Lives are forever changed in some ways for the better and in others for the worse.

In Every Side Betrayed, we meet Lauryn, a young, savvy, and driven business professional. Life is more than good to her, and she's on the fast track to checking off many of her life goal boxes. Many adore her, she befriends just about everyone, and men never want to kill her in the F-M-K game.

Prepare to laugh and cry with Lauryn as she deals with challenges in all areas of her life as she approaches the end of her twenties. Readers will go on the journey with her as she navigates the highs and lows in her love life and career in Nashville. Does she learn to take the bull by horn or roll with the punches thrown her way.
