

New Orleans tour guide, Katie Creaux, knows how to pass a good time, but what happens when the people on her tour keep passing away?

For Katie, life in the Big Easy had been anything but...easy. She lost her dream job as a chef when her restaurant was damaged in a hurricane. Her failed marriage got tossed in the trash like a King Cake on Ash Wednesday.

She is forced to rebuild her life as a single mom, and paying the bills isn't always easy. When she finds a job at Tour Dat City Tours, she gets to share her love of New Orleans - every loud, joyous, delicious, pot-holed-covered inch of it.

This cozy mystery series features murder and mayhem served up with a big bowl of gumbo (with potato salad, of course) and is perfect for readers wishing Jessica Fletcher of Murder, She Wrote had a Cajun cousin.

What readers are saying

"This book was such a delight! Some characters were endearing and others were infuriating—just like you hope for in any good book. And I felt like I was experiencing all the sights, sounds, and tastes of New Orleans. Plus, the plot line kept me guessing "whodunnit" until the end! Give it a read!"

About the Author

Ashley is a writer, red beans and rice enthusiast, and lover of all things New Orleans. She grew up on the Gulf Coast and now lives in Memphis, Tennessee with her family.

