

J.P. Plack

J.P. Plack graduated from the university of Oregon with BA in English lit and won scholarship into and completed the Kidd Creative Writing Program. He also won the Matthew Knight Poetry Award and has been a finalist in several writing contests including the Francine Ringold Young Writers Prize.

Since college, he has turned his attention towards the medium of comic books and graphic novels, writing the acclaimed indie series Eudaimonia, as well as the noir/murder mystery thriller, Noirlem.

Coleman Carmichael is a consummately curious man with a gift for deductive reasoning. After solving a mysterious death in his Harlem apartment building, he draws the attention of a rookie police detective frustrated by his department. The pair teams up and though mysteries will be solved, what they find is far beyond what either could have imagined.
