

STERLIN

Williams

Author Bio

Sterlin Dwayne Williams had a successful career with the Federal Motor Carrier Safety Administration (United States Department of Transportation) and retired after thirty-two years of federal service. During his career, he served as the Division Administrator for twenty-six years for Louisiana and Mississippi. While with the agency, Sterlin served as the first chairperson of the National Diversity Committee in directing and implementing the agency's Diversity Initiative.

After he retired from federal service, Sterlin continued to be a steadfast supporter of social justice issues. His books allowed a platform for voicing the needs and concerns of disenfranchised, marginalized communities, and underrepresented cultures. Sterlin received several book and advocacy awards. Sterlin's published academic books are on file at several public libraries, law school libraries, and institutions of higher learning libraries including the Schomburg Center for Research in Black Culture in Harlem, New York, Thurgood Marshall School of Law Library at Texas Southern University in Houston, TX, and Indiana University in Bloomington. Book Bio “Sterlin's book, entitled What Happens When the World's Racial Cultures Clash?, is Sterlin's second book. It is a sequel to his first book, Understanding the Far-Reaching Global Impact of the World Racial Order. This provocative book offers a thoughtful analysis yet the riveting and haunting impact of past unresolved global-racial-cultural clashes and the present cultural discourse in which many cultures still experience deeply demeaning racism. The book provides an opportunity for societal discussions on complex topics of cultural evolution and development to stimulate further learning, analysis, and cultural advancement. His first book focused on an understanding of the world's racial caste system. This book explores the interaction dynamics between cultures and racial groups.
